ABOUT

I am an M.A. candidate in Religious Studies at Rutgers University, where my work centers on the New Testament. I bring close study of the ancient languages — Biblical Greek, Hebrew, and Latin — together with computational methods, building projects such as a syntactical translation of Paul's letters and a semantic lexicon of ancient Greek. My background spans physics (Duke) and public administration (UNLV), and I have founded and built software ventures alongside my academic work.
